Originally created by Forefront Corporation for Ashton-Tate and first released in 1984, Framework was an early integrated office suite for DOS. It has a built in word processor, spreadsheet, database, outliner, graphing, and telecommunications. Framework provides a text-based "gui", including windowing and menus. All of the different components behave in similar, consistent ways. The Framework office suite is historically distinguished as the first all-in-one office suite for IBM PC compatible computers. The spreadsheet component is also unique, as its design let it support "3D" spreadsheets. Released in 1988 by Ashton-Tate for DOS.
